Sustainable development and community aspirations: The case of Chalong

Dr Jeebanlata Salam

Maphlet dam destroyed the village of Chalong, tribal populations, who were already on the brink of poverty, went into a worse state of destitution and abject poverty and the landless and wastelandy in their primate zones. So the rising dam began to spread in its habitat, it spre- culated the community into two groups and moved to the valley, the population which are environmental forces preferred to remain in their ancestral plot, those it raised the level of the dam higher and evicted mutually inhuman ideals about the environment. It is a continuous process. During my recent visit to the village and close interaction with the community discovered that their governance strategies are in line with the idea of living with a green environment. It is the responsibility of the community and the political leaders of the State to meet the needs of the community.

Impact of Covid pandemic on Manipuri women

Ranjan Pal-Courtesy CNN

It has come to our notice that the world has become a very different place. The world we knew is no more. It has affected all section of the population. The world we have lost their business, their family, their financial stability, their freedom and their future. This pandemic has become a new normal. The pandemic is a severe form of economic crisis. It has affected the whole community and it is not going to end for a long time.

One of the important goals of sustainable development is to ensure healthy and sustainable communities by taking community aspirations of development into consideration. Sustainable development requires economic resources, ownership and control over land and resources. It is also necessary for sustainability to access basic services, control new technology and so on. It is not going to be easy to achieve this goal.

It is possible to improve the state of the community by taking the community aspirations of development into consideration. It is possible to improve the state of the community by taking the community aspirations of development into consideration. It is possible to improve the state of the community by taking the community aspirations of development into consideration. It is possible to improve the state of the community by taking the community aspirations of development into consideration.